Colleen Exner recommends Sally Rooney’s Normal People (2018):

“Marianne and Connell are two very different people from the same town in Ireland. In their last year of school, an odd friendship develops between them. After school, they seem to go different ways but meet again in college, where their relationship continues. Together, they go through all the ups and downs of university life and the challenges of friendship. Especially brilliant about this novel is the characterisation of the two protagonists. Sally Rooney really manages to give the reader a close insight into the minds of the young people and their perspectives on life.”
